MK31

When I began this project, I had no idea if it would develop into a single track, an EP or an album. My only goal was to find a film in the public domain, compile a collection of samples from it and see if I could use them as a starting point for some new music.

After some browsing of public domain films at archive.org, I found "Cosmos: War of the Planets", a low-budget 1978 Italian sci-fi flick that's consistently panned by critics & viewers. Perfect!

After the first song (what became "Dark, Cold & Inhospitable") was falling into place, I felt comfortable with my process and decided to try and make an EP happen for Netlabel Day.

With each release, I learn more about music theory, audio production, mixing and this time a little bit about mastering (although I probably have a lot more to learn) and in so doing I become ever more connected to making music. It's at once an amazing and a frustrating process that's incredibly fulfilling. If you love music and haven't tried making any, you should probably try. Find my or Tha Silent Partner's samplePacks on blocSonic.com and get started!

Thanks for listening.
