These songs were tracks that I either used for other projects that never got an official release somewhere or they were beats that were collecting dust on the hard drive.

“Bring That Beat FAIL” was the original track I did for a remix of the Public Enemy song “Bring That Beat Back” back in 2005/2006. I worked on it for maybe two weeks before I totally gave up on it and started over from scratch. I recently rediscovered this and thought it worth releasing as its own thing.

“Granby Street” was a loop that just never seemed to come together for me when I first dug it up back in 2016. Only when I recently heard it again did I decide to pitch it way down and throw it on some suitably nasty drums.

“Coke Partee” was a track I literally made in 10 minutes for a 6 second scene in a much maligned 48 hour film project I did called Bicycle. Included in this new version are clips from that film.

“Errythang SUITS” was an idea I had for a song for my film Swing Lowe Sweet Chariote that was envisioned almost as a sort of theme song for the character Ace. In the end I had more music than I needed and at the time I was never happy with the arrangement I was working with. As it lives now I’m totally thrilled with it.

“De-Funkt” was supposed to be a beat for a side project that I was trying to do with my partner Marcus J (RIP) that would’ve been our take on EPMD that was called MDMD (Marc & Doc Makin Dollars). I was trying to come up with some of that old school Hit/Def Squad funk and I think this would’ve fit the bill.

“Kahmeela In The Korner” was the track that closed out a web series that I edited called Kahmeela’s Korner. We just needed a short piece to run underneath the end title card that reminded people to subscribe to the channel. Hip-Hop heads that know should know...

Yo Doc... thanks for these gems! Public Enemy heads are going to love the unreleased gold that kicks things off on Side A! Thanks again!
